In New Cabinet Job Peterson Seen Heading Trade Relations of U.S.

By Carroll Kilpatrick
WASHINGTON, Dec. 5 (WP).—President Nixon today nominated Under Secretary of Commerce James T. Lynn to be Secretary of Commerce and Under Secretary of Commerce for Trade and Development. Mr. Lynn, a graduate of Harvard Law School, practicing law in Cleveland until he entered the Commerce Department as general counsel in 1969.

Mr. Ziegler said that the President thinks that Mr. Lynn is the "strong and vigorous leadership" needed for the Interior Department's broad responsibilities, which include development and preservation of natural resources, administering Indian affairs and other functions.

Mr. Nixon is confident that Secretary Morton will "continue to do so in a second term," Mr. Ziegler said.

The press secretary would not discuss—but did not deny—the reports about Mr. Dent and Secretary Peterson.

U.S. Warns UN on Plan For Mideast Draft Resolution Called Dangerous

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Dec. 5 (UPI).—The United States said today that any effort to redefine peace essentials for the Middle East or to impose conditions on either side in the conflict might endanger the area's shaky truce.

U.S. Ambassador George Bush offered arguments to the General Assembly against a draft resolution that is being circulated, but has not yet been formally proposed, by nonaligned countries.

The draft resolution would have the assembly call for "immediate and unconditional" Israeli withdrawal from occupied Arab territories, urge all countries to withhold aid that would enable Israel to perpetuate the occupation, and ask the Security Council to take "all appropriate measures" to achieve evacuation.

Mr. Bush told the assembly that guidelines for Middle East peace were established in the Security Council resolution of Nov. 22, 1947, which called for Israel withdrawal, also provided for establishment of "secure and recognized boundaries" in the area.

(China sharply criticized Soviet and American policies in the Middle East, accusing both superpowers of "acquiescence, support and abetment" of Israel, Reuters reported.)

(Chinese Ambassador Huang Hua told the assembly that while American political, economic and military support is undisguised and open, Russia is "masquerading as a friend of the Arab people" yet forbidding them to counterattack Israel.)

Face-to-Face Talks
Israel has insisted on face-to-face negotiations to achieve these aims. The Arabs refuse to sit at the same table with the Israelis.

Mr. Bush reaffirmed staunch U.S. support for the five-year-old landmark measure—known as Resolution 242—and for negotiations for the fruitless mission of Ambassador Gunnar V. Jarring, special UN Middle East peace envoy.

"The General Assembly," he said, "can't seek to redefine essentials of peace in the Middle East. It can't seek to impose courses of action on the parties, either by making new demands or imposing conditions on one side or the other."

"These approaches simply will not work," he said, "and they are dangerous to the peace that has existed since 1970."

Paris Talk Is Put Off For a Day Both Optimism, Pessimism Result

By Jonathan C. Randal
PARIS, Dec. 5 (WP).—The abrupt cancellation of today's planned secret meeting between Henry A. Kissinger and North Vietnamese negotiators added to the search for peace. The search for peace, however, did little to relieve the uncertainty.

Faced with a news blackout from both delegations, observers were reduced to speculating about the reasons for the postponement.

Optimists hoped that the five hours of negotiations yesterday—when the talks resumed after a nine-day hiatus—meant that enough progress had been made to require serious redrafting and to necessitate consultation by both delegations with their capitals and respective allies.

These hopes were supported by a Washington announcement today, stating that since yesterday's negotiating session, heavy cable traffic had developed between presidential adviser Kissinger and the White House.

Presidential Press Secretary Ron Ziegler said the exchanges were intensive. He said President Nixon had received a number of cables from Mr. Kissinger, and had replied with "certain instructions."

He added that Mr. Kissinger had been in touch with the White House, but not personally with Mr. Nixon, by telephone. Mr. Ziegler gave no reason for the one-day suspension of the Paris talks, saying only: "Both sides mutually agreed to postpone the meeting for a day."

Pessimists' View
Observers here who were pessimistic about this postponement noted that the only other cancellation on record took place two weeks ago when both delegations announced they were skipping a day.

Last night's talks then had reached a crisis point because of vastly repeated American proposals, which rebounded on the very heart of the draft cease-fire accords worked out here in October.

Two weeks ago the two delegations did, in fact, meet—despite the announced one-day postponement—to work out the details of resuming that round of talks.

North Vietnamese sources said the cancellation today was made at American request despite surface indications to the contrary. But since today's meeting had been announced by the White House yesterday, the North Vietnamese issued the statement this morning, calling off the meeting. It was assumed that Hanoi had asked for the postponement.

Today's only visible movement involved a long morning visit to top Hanoi negotiator Le Duc Tho by Mrs. Nguyen Thi Binh, foreign minister of the Viet Cong's Provisional Revolutionary Government. She is top representative at the formal peace talks.

Shuttle Trouble Seen
The length of their meeting—nearly 14 hours—prompted speculation that Hanoi was having almost as much trouble with its ally as the United States was with the South Vietnamese government.

Meanwhile, the South Vietnamese peace-talks delegation issued a statement denying Viet Cong and Hanoi charges that Saigon was planning to exterminate political prisoners in its prisons at or before the cease-fire.

The statement countercharged that captured Viet Cong documents called for the post-peace "400-percent extermination" of political and village cadres and elected officials, as well as a "massacre" of civil servants, army officers and their families. It added that since the conflict began nothing had been heard of 28,000 South Vietnamese soldiers and civilians captured by the Viet Cong.

Last Planned U.S. Moon Trip for 20 Years An Era Ends With Apollo-17 Flight

By Thomas O'Toole
CAPE KENNEDY, Fla., Dec. 5 (UPI).—Mankind ends an era of exploration this week with the launch of Apollo-17, sixth and last U.S. manned landing on the moon.

Apollo-17 astronauts Eugene A. Cernan, Harrison H. Schmitt and Ronald E. Evans are due to leave Earth tomorrow night, the last of 11 astronauts to fly under the sign of Apollo, a program named for the Greek god of the sun and set into motion by President John F. Kennedy 11 years ago.

President Kennedy began the 5-billion program when the Soviet Union put the first man in space. Members of the Apollo-17 crew will be the last Americans to go to the moon for another 20 years.

"It will be a long time before we go back to the moon," NASA Administrator James C. Fletcher did not long ago. "Even if Apollo-17 doesn't make it to the moon for some reason, we won't go again for the simple reason that we cannot afford it."

Go-Ahead Is Given
Meanwhile, mission officials gave the go-ahead today for the preparations for the launch. William Schick, chief test engineer, said that "we in operations feel it's been one of the smoothest operations we've had some time."

While the astronauts sleep late today to help adjust their biological clocks, scientists loaded aboard the spacecraft another set of travelers—five tiny mice on the California desert. They are in individual tubes inside a lead aluminum canister, in which they will ride in orbit around the moon. Water-like microray detectors are implanted in their skulls, and on their urn with the astronauts, their data will be studied to determine the effect of cosmic radiation.

The experiment looks to the future, when humans may make extended space flights.

Apollo-17 promises to end the solo program on a note of triumph, starting with the launch at 2:53 p.m. the first time Apollo Saturn No. 5 moon rocket will have left the earth's darkness.

If the skies are clear, the rocket will leave a trail of flame as far north as Charlotte, N.C., as far south as Havana, and over a region three times the size of Texas.

Capt. Cernan, Mr. Schmitt and Mr. Evans are due to rise in the vicinity of the moon at Dec. 10 and go into orbit around the moon at 2:43 p.m. Eastern Standard Time. While Mr. Evans orbits the moon one in the command craft America, Capt. Cernan and Mr. Schmitt will land on the moon in a landing craft Challenger.

Landing Site
The last Apollo landing will be place at 2:54 p.m. on Monday, Dec. 11, in a region of the moon called "Taurus-Littrow," named for the nearby Taurus mountains and Littrow Crater situated in the lower left corner of the left eye of the man-the-moon.

The targeted landing site is a scenic valley six miles across and is surrounded on all sides

Rogers Says Basis Exists For Hijack Pact With Cuba

By H.D.S. Greenway
WASHINGTON, Dec. 5 (UPI).—Secretary of State William P. Rogers said today that the United States and Cuba now have the "foundation of an agreement" on a hijacking treaty.

Mr. Rogers and the Swiss Ambassador to Havana, Silvio Masnata, met for 40 minutes at the State Department this morning before Mr. Rogers left for Brussels and the NATO ministerial meeting.

Mr. Rogers said that he handed the Swiss ambassador an "American draft" for a proposed agreement to take back to Havana.

The Swiss have represented the United States in Cuba ever since the rupture of diplomatic relations in 1961. On Nov. 25, Ambassador Masnata was given Cuba's proposals for an agreement, which he transmitted to Washington. The draft Mr. Rogers gave him was the American reply.

"I think it very evident that both countries are working very seriously to come to an agreement on hijacking," said Switzerland's ambassador to the United States, Felix Schneider, who took part in today's meeting.

"I think the matter is rather difficult at the beginning," he said, "but the way that both governments have started this matter is very promising."

"Promising Basis"
State Department spokesman Charles Bray said: "We now have a promising basis for proceeding to an agreement which would cover the hijacking of aircraft and ships."

He said that the United States and Cuba were trying to reach an understanding on both aircraft and ships "where the use of force or extortion is involved." The U.S. view, he said, was that "hijacking by definition involved the use of force as a means to extortion."

That boats should be included in any hijacking agreement is important to Havana because far more Cuban boats than aircraft have been hijacked by Cubans fleeing to the United States than aircraft.

To the United States the definition of hijacking as involving the use of force, whether it be boats or planes, is important. In the past, the United States has objected to a blanket agreement that could cover the theft of small boats, or the voluntary diversion of aircraft not involving the use of force.

"We don't want to agree to return the guy who floats over here on a home-made raft," a State Department official said recently.

To the Cubans the issue is not so simple. "Many boats, vessels and aircraft have left our territory with persons who have murdered their guards in order to be able to escape," Havana radio said recently.

"Are they not pirates? The United States has given love, money and credit to such persons."

Another issue important to the United States was given love, money and credit to such persons.

Pompidou to Visit The Soviet Union

PARIS, Dec. 5 (AP).—French President Georges Pompidou will pay a two-day unofficial visit to Moscow Jan. 11 and 12 for talks with Soviet party leader Leonid I. Brezhnev, it was announced tonight.

French sources said the meeting was arranged at Soviet initiative and that the European security conference, the conference of mutual and balanced force reductions and the SALT talks would be the major subjects of discussion.

Following Mr. Brezhnev's visit to France last October, Soviet authorities expressed a desire for regular French-Soviet talks at the highest level, regular talks which would, however, be informal and not encumbered by protocol, the sources said.

Other sources saw it as a political move to improve Mr. Pompidou's standing with leftist voters, of no matter what political affiliation, in the upcoming election.

Accord Signed at Brussels 10 in NATO to Join in Arms Making

By John M. Goshko
BRUSSELS, Dec. 5 (WP).—Defense ministers of 10 European countries in NATO signed a joint declaration today pledging they will cooperate closely in procurement and development of future weapons for their armed forces.

This formal agreement by the so-called Eurogroup faction within the North Atlantic Treaty Organization raised the possibility of Western Europe's becoming an important new force in weapon manufacturing and technology in the coming decade.

However, West German Defense Minister Georg Leber, the chairman of today's meeting, and members of other delegations went out of their way to stress that the European decision is not intended to undercut the role of the United States as "the decisive element" in NATO defenses.

At a press conference, Mr. Leber said the aim is to complement the U.S. contribution to NATO by making the European members more efficient in arming their forces and better able to coordinate their defenses through joint use of the same weapons and equipment.

In some cases, Mr. Leber noted, the collaborative effort might actually result in increased purchases of U.S. military equipment. He cited such areas as tactical missile technology, where the Europeans are likely to decide that the most efficient course would be their joint adoption and purchase of American-made systems.

Signing of the agreement came on the eve of the winter meeting of NATO defense and foreign ministers. The Eurogroup countries, a semi-formal grouping within the 16-member alliance, are Britain, West Germany, the Netherlands, Belgium, Denmark, Norway, Italy, Greece, Turkey and Luxembourg.

The 10 defense ministers announced that the combined defense budgets of their countries will total at least $15 billion more in 1973 than they did in 1972. They also made public a detailed list of the major items of military equipment from guns to ships, that they plan to put into service in 1973.

It was the third straight year that the meeting has revealed this accounting of planned defense-expenditure increases. The practice was started to counter charges in the American Congress that the United States bears a disproportionate share of NATO defense costs and that the European members are not doing enough on their own behalf.

Mr. Leber said that France, a

British Study Urges Lowering Drinking Age, Longer Hours

By Alvin Shuster
LONDON, Dec. 5 (UPI).—A long-awaited report today proposed a major easing of Britain's drinking laws to allow longer hours for pubs and the admission of children under certain conditions.

The report, described as a blueprint for a "pub revolution," also suggested that the legal age for pub drinking be lowered from 18 to 17. And it predicted the development of continental-like cafes catering to the entire family with food and drink.

The proposals for longer hours generally were welcomed by the British, who consume about 35 million barrels of beer a year, the equivalent of 30 gallons for each man and woman. But the prospect of children squirming around underfoot caused some alarm.

"Most people come to my pub to get away from their children," said Bob Turner at the Chestnut Tree, east of London. "And the kids might hear things they shouldn't. Customers are bound to get drunk and use bad language."

The report, prepared over the last 20 months by a 13-member committee appointed by the home secretary, made it clear that children would not be wandering about in every inch of all 64,000 pubs in England and Wales. It said that pub owners could apply for permission to admit children only to certain rooms deemed suitable.

The longer hours, apart from pleasing drinkers, would come as a source of joy to housewives, who often view the British way of drinking with some confusion.

The reason is that, under present law, pubs close from 3 to 5:30 p.m. every weekday. They may open no earlier than 11 a.m. without special permission, and must close by 11 p.m. during the week. The Sunday hours are 12 noon to 2 p.m. and 7 p.m. to 10:30 p.m.

14 Hours a Day
The committee, headed by Lord Evers, a former Conservative member of Parliament, proposed that the 9 1/2-hour weekday limit be abandoned and that pubs be allowed to remain open from 10 a.m. until midnight, a total of 14 hours a day seven days a week. Pubs no longer would be required to close in the afternoon. Many especially would continue to do so anyway to give their bartenders some time off.

The proposals, attacked by temperance groups, will now be studied by the Home Office before legislation goes to Parliament.

Allende in Algiers For Day of Talks Before Soviet Visit

ALGIERS, Dec. 5 (Reuters).—Chilean President Salvador Allende arrived here today for talks with Algerian President Houari Boumedienne. Mr. Allende came here from New York, where he addressed the United Nations General Assembly yesterday.

He was given a warm welcome by the Algerian leader.

Solidarity between third-world producers of minerals like copper and oil is expected to be the main theme of the Algerian talks.

President Allende will spend about 17 hours in Algiers before going to Moscow.

U.S. Fertility Rate Drops Below Replacement Level for First Time

By Jack Rosenthal
WASHINGTON, Dec. 5 (UPI).—Fertility in the United States has dropped for the first time, below the "replacement" level of 2.1 children, a family that is necessary to achieve zero population growth.

The population is still growing, but it appears that the rate of growth this year will be only a little more than half that averaged during the sixties.

According to new federal statistics for 19 consecutive months the birth rate each month has been lower than in the same month a year before. And, despite an increase in women of child-bearing age, so has been the actual number of births.

The estimated fertility rate, consequently, has dropped from 2.39 children a family for the first nine months of 1971 to 2.08 this year.

If it persists, this seemingly small difference in rate would mean nearly 17 million fewer Americans by the year 2000 than at the 2.39 rate.

The larger significance of the new rate lies in the fact that it means the country has, for the first time, cracked what analysts called the "2.1 barrier."

The 2.1-child figure is that required for the population eventually no more than to replace itself, assuming no immigration. This is the goal of the national zero population growth movement. (The figure is 2.1 rather than just 2 to account for girls who die before reaching child-bearing age.)

Even during the Depression years of 1935 to 1939, previously the lowest recorded birth rate period, the average fertility figure was slightly above 2.3 children a family.

Were the nation to sustain a 2.1-child fertility rate for 70 years, the population would stop growing, having reached about 320 million. It is now about 202.5 million.

The presence of a disproportionately large number of young people in the population means that zero population growth could not be achieved in a short period of time. The new figures indicate that the population will increase by 0.7 percent this year. The average annual increase during the sixties was 1.3 percent.

Were the fertility rate to go below the 2.1 rate, as it now has, and stay there, the day of zero population growth would come correspondingly sooner.

Demographers caution against any expectations that zero population growth is likely. They treat short-term "period" statistics warily, noting sharp historic swings in fertility.

For example, as recently as 1897, the peak year of the post-war baby boom, the fertility rate climbed to an all-time U.S. high of almost 3.8 children a family.

The possibility of a new upward swing is latent within the nation's current age structure. Because of the baby boom, there are now about 560,000 more women aged 18 than there were 10 years ago and 900,000 more than 20 years ago.

With so many more potential mothers, even a small upward shift in the fertility rate could cause a significant increase in the population growth rate.

For the moment, however, the new federal birth statistics all point to low birth and fertility rates. Through September, there were 2,437,000 births, 236,000 fewer than in the corresponding period last year. This is a drop of 9 percent.

The general fertility rate—the number of births per woman of child-bearing age—declined 11 percent for the nine-month period this year to 75.3 births. The crude birth rate—the number of births per thousand population—also dropped 11 percent from the 1971 period to 16.6 births.

Population experts identify a series of reasons for such declines. One is the growing proportion of young women who stay single. Another is that even married women are having children later. A third is the expressed desire of women—black, white, rich and poor—to have smaller families.

Other factors are the growing number of working wives, the state of the economy, the increasing use and effectiveness of contraception and the broadening liberalization of abortion laws.

The new figures are contained in the Monthly Vital Statistics Report, Vol. 21, No. 4, published by the National Center for Health Statistics at Rockville, Md.

Free Assembly Tested In Moscow and Fails

MOSCOW, Dec. 5 (AP).—Despite the certainty of a KGB crackdown, physicist Andrei D. Sakharov and some 24 political dissidents held a silent demonstration in Pushkin Square here tonight.

The group stood motionless for about a minute before a statue of poet Alexander Pushkin, who wrote out against czarist tyranny. Then, dozens of secret policemen and uniformed militiamen moved in to disperse them.

The demonstration has been staged annually since 1965 to test the right of free assembly on Constitution Day. It usually attracts far more secret police agents than dissidents. Today was no exception.

Senate Hearings Open

Strong Medicine Prescribed For Sickly, Sinking Congress

By Spencer Rich

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5 (AP).—The Congress dead? Has the presidency gobbled up enough power to make Congress a "constitutional relic" and to put the United States on the road to authoritarian government?

A group of political physicians, led by Sen. Charles Mathias Jr., R. Md., and Sen. Adlai M. Stevenson III, D. Ill., assembled on Capitol Hill yesterday to view the patient. They concluded that, while the old man isn't quite finished yet, he is mighty sick and needs strong medicine to make him well again.

The key sickness was diagnosed as the inability of Congress—with its archaic procedures and inadequate staff—to stand up to the executive branch and exert its constitutional force as one of the three foundations of federal decision making.

The get-well prescriptions included:

● A big dose of computers and a better technical staff, to let Congress deal better with the federal budget.

● Mandatory retirement at age 70, as proposed by Sen. Barry Goldwater, R. Ariz.

● The requirement of "regular attendance" in place of absenteeism and junketing.

● Vastly strengthened controls over election campaign spending, so that rich men, corporations and unions cannot buy legislative influence.

● Some softening of the seniority system.

Special Hearings

"The fact is," said Sen. Mathias as he and Sen. Stevenson opened a series of special Senate hearings on congressional reform, "that in relation to the executive branch of government, the Congress today has become a third- or fourth-class power, a separate and thoroughly unequal branch of our national government."

Sen. Stevenson and the president of the League of Women Voters, Lucy Wilson Benson, said at the hearing that a serious congressional shortcoming is the inability to really evaluate the President's budget.

With what were termed a handful of staff members and virtually no information-gathering mechanisms of its own, Congress is forced to depend on the executive agencies for virtually all its information and evaluative material, they said.

Under these conditions, Sen. Stevenson said, "we are outmaneuvered, we are outgunned" again and again in spending disputes with the White House.

35 for Committees

He noted that the Office of Management and Budget alone, not counting the budget offices of individual federal agencies, has more than 700 staff members; the two congressional appropriations committees combined have 85.

He also said that the Pentagon has 30,000 people working in one capacity or another to draw up the defense procurement budget and that the Senate Appropriations Committee has 15 persons to evaluate this budget.

Sen. Goldwater, in a statement submitted for the record, joined former Sen. Joseph S. Clark, D. Pa., Leon Shull of Americans for Democratic Action, Mrs. Benson and Clarence Mitchell of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in criticism of the seniority system, which awards committee chairmanships and prize assignments to those with the longest service.

Move to Postpone Value-Added Tax Beaten in Britain

LONDON, Dec. 5 (Reuters).—The British government tonight beat off an opposition move in the House of Commons to postpone the introduction of a Value-Added Tax (VAT) as of next April.

A Labor party motion calling for VAT to be deferred for 12 months was defeated by 285 votes to 235.

Chancellor of the Exchequer Anthony Barber maintained that there was no case for a delay and accused Labor spokesmen of irresponsibly campaigning to alarm the public about increased prices because of the new tax.

VAT, levied on every stage of a product's manufacture, is intended to replace existing payroll and sales taxes. It is required under the rules of the Common Market, which Britain will join next month along with Denmark and the Irish Republic.

Critics suggested that Britain was under no immediate compulsion to bring in VAT so quickly and pointed to the example of Italy, which had postponed its introduction there for several years.

3 Missing in Ship Fire

GOTHAAAB, Greenland, Dec. 5 (Reuters).—Eighteen of the crew were rescued today from a Norwegian ship on fire in the Davis Straits west of here, but preliminary reports said the three missing crew members were missing.

The survivors were picked up today and brought to Godthaab.

NEAR-MOON MICE—Five pocket mice from the California desert, like the one above, will be inside a sealed canister aboard the command module when Apollo-17 leaves for the moon. The canister has food and an environmental control system to keep the mice alive. They will not go to the moon's surface but will orbit it. On return, the mice will be killed and examined to determine how cosmic radiation has affected their brain tissues.

Watergate Trial Judge Wants Prosecution to Broaden Scope

By Lawrence Meyer

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5 (WP).—The judge who will preside at the trial of seven men charged in connection with the break-in and alleged bugging of Democratic National Committee headquarters said yesterday that the trial should cover a broader area than the prosecution has indicated it will cover.

The comments by Judge John Sirica during a four-hour pretrial conference were the first indication that the trial may explore whether the seven defendants were operating on orders from higher authorities when they allegedly conspired to break in and bug the Democratic headquarters, in the Watergate building complex, on June 17.

"This jury is going to want to know what did these men go into that headquarters for," Judge Sirica, chief judge of the U.S. District Court here, said. "Was their sole purpose political espionage? Were they paid? Was there financial gain? Who hired them? Who started this?"

In the course of the wide-ranging conference, lawyers argued that:

● Judge Sirica should exercise some "control" over the press in order to keep it from prejudicing the jury. William O. Bittman, attorney for former White House aide E. Howard Hunt Jr., told Judge Sirica that the press "has had a field day writing prejudicial articles. I think it should come to a halt and your honor has a right to stop it." The jurist said he would deal with the problem of trial publicity by sequestering the jury.

● The Los Angeles Times should be compelled, under the threat of contempt-of-court proceedings, to produce tapes and notes of an interview with Alfred C. Baldwin 3d, described by the defense as the government's key witness.

According to federal investigators, the June 17 break-in was one incident in a yearlong campaign, on behalf of President Nixon's re-election drive, to spy on and disrupt Democratic presidential campaigns. In addition to Mr. Hunt, one other former White House aide, G. Gordon Liddy, is charged in connection with the alleged Watergate bugging. Mr. Liddy was counsel for the Finance Committee to Re-elect the President until he was fired after refusing to answer the

Sneezy? Coughing? 3 Doctors Suggest a Nice Bowl of Soup

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5 (Reuters).—A bowl of hot soup is more use in fighting coughs and sneezes than many of the so-called remedies on the market, three doctors told a congressional subcommittee today.

They warned the Senate Monopoly Subcommittee that there is no known cure for the common cold and that highly advertised nonprescription cold relief medicines are virtually worthless and can even be dangerous.

All three doctors suggested that aspirin or hot soup was preferable in fighting runny noses, sneezes, stuffed sinuses or other cold symptoms.

The doctors were Sol Katz, director of the pulmonary disease division of Georgetown University School of Medicine; Richard Hornick, head of the division of infectious diseases of the University of Maryland School of Medicine; and Thomas Dunphy, of the Hunter Foundation for Health Care, at Lexington, Ky.

They testified during hearings conducted by Sen. Gaylord Nelson, D. Wis., who charged that the widespread promotion of cold medicines "is nothing short of scandalous."

Army Court Opens Review Of Calley Case

After Hearing Pleas From Defense Counsel

FALLS CHURCH, Va., Dec. 5 (AP).—A military court has begun a review of the conviction of Lt. William L. Calley Jr. in the My Lai massacre following an appeal by Lt. Calley's lawyers that his 30-year prison sentence was too harsh.

"I think he has had his lesson—way more severe than I think is justified," said George W. Latimer, Calley's civilian attorney, in portraying Lt. Calley's actions at My Lai as those of a young officer responsibly carrying out orders.

The three-judge Army Court of Military Review is expected to announce early next year whether it will sustain the conviction and uphold the sentence, reduce it or set Lt. Calley free. The court cannot increase the penalty. Lt. Calley is under house arrest at Fort Benning, Ga.

Lt. Calley, 29, was convicted nearly two years ago of murdering at least 32 Vietnamese civilians at My Lai during a search-and-destroy mission on March 16, 1968. He was sentenced to life in prison, but that subsequently was reduced to 30 years, followed by President Nixon's order to keep him under house arrest rather than in military prison.

Throughout nearly six hours of arguments yesterday Mr. Latimer pictured Lt. Calley as the scapegoat, noting that of 25 men charged in connection with the massacre only one—Lt. Calley—was convicted.

The defense argued that Lt. Calley should not have been convicted of any crime greater than manslaughter, contending that he acted without malice, and without malice there could be no murder charge.

Suit for My Lai Survivors

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 5 (Reuters).—South Vietnamese Buddhist leaders have filed a lawsuit here seeking $400 million damages from the U.S. government and Lt. Calley for 57 survivors of the My Lai massacre.

Attorney Paul Narkin, who filed the damages suit, said yesterday that while attention had been focused on Lt. Calley and the killings, the 57 survivors had gone unnoticed.

Mr. Narkin said Lt. Calley was serving his 30-year term "in his own apartment with a telephone, television and a girl friend who can visit him any time she wants."

Mr. Narkin alleges in his suit that Lt. Calley's current appeal is a charade and that Lt. Calley should be extradited to Vietnam to stand trial for his crimes against the Vietnamese people.

Supreme Court Upholds Ban On 'Gross Sexuality' in Bars

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5 (AP).—The Supreme Court ruled, 6-3, today that states may shut nightclubs or bars that feature bottomless dancers, sex films or other forms of "bachelorette revelry."

The decision, in a California case, held that the First Amendment—guaranteeing freedom of speech and, by extension, expression—is not intended to permit real or simulated sexual acts in public. But the 21st Amendment, while ending Prohibition, granted state liquor officials the broad authority to guard "public health, welfare and morals," said Justice William H. Rehnquist for the court.

U.S. Court Bars 3-Month Delay In Drug Trial

NEW YORK, Dec. 5 (UPI).—The U.S. Court of Appeals yesterday rejected a bid by attorneys for Auguste Joseph Ricard to postpone his narcotics-conspiracy trial for three months.

The three-judge panel, citing "the public interest in a speedy trial of a serious charge of this nature," allowed the trial to proceed as scheduled yesterday before Judge John C. Cappelletti.

In arguing against a delay, the government said its key witness, Cesar Bianchi, 36, of Concepcion, Paraguay, had been threatened Saturday at the Nassau County Jail.

The threat was made, the government said, by Christian David, a 41-year-old Frenchman and alleged leader of one of the world's largest heroin-smuggling operations. He pleaded guilty Friday in federal court to a narcotics charge and was sentenced to 20 years in prison.

Mr. Ricard, a 62-year-old restaurant operator, was extradited from Paraguay Sept. 3. He has been held on a charge of conspiracy in the smuggling of 94 pounds of heroin into Florida in October, 1970.

Ship Strike Ends On West Coast

NEW YORK, Dec. 5 (UPI).—A five-week strike by 10,000 West Coast merchant marine deck officers was settled yesterday.

A spokesman for the International Organization of Masters, Mates and Pilots said that about 40 vessels made idle by the dispute were immediately released.

The strike against Pacific Maritime Association, an employers' organization on the West Coast, began Oct. 24 and severely affected commerce in Hawaii, which is almost totally dependent on surface shipping for consumer goods and other materials.

Allende Charges Of Intervention Denied by ITT

NEW YORK, Dec. 5 (AP).—The International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. denied today charges by President Salvador Allende of Chile that it attempted to bring about a civil war in his nation.

"ITT has never intervened or interfered in the internal affairs of Chile in any way," a company spokesman said. He added that the corporation had never taken any such action "nor are there any facts to support such a charge."

"ITT has been interested only in the safety and well-being of its employees in Chile and in receiving just compensation for those assets which the Chilean government might acquire."

"The record shows that over a period of years, ITT has always respected a host country's desire to nationalize an ITT property. This has been true in Argentina, Brazil, Mexico and Peru," the spokesman continued.

"Mutually satisfactory negotiations and payment of just compensations have characterized all such nationalizations."

"ITT regrets that these unfounded allegations have again been aired and the corporation still hopes that a mutually satisfactory agreement can be reached" with Chile.

Mr. Allende made the charges yesterday in a speech to the UN General Assembly.

Court Blocks Auto Safety Device in U.S.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 5 (AP).—A federal court today delayed implementation of standards requiring 4-type safety devices in automobiles produced after Aug. 1975.

In a 2-1 opinion, the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals said that testing standards for "passive" safety devices as airbags, which act automatically without aid from automobile passengers, must be re-evaluated.

The court told the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration to delay its order to require passive restraints "until a stable time" after it devises usable new test specifications. A decision followed a review of evidence brought by four car manufacturers—Chrysler Corp., Motor Co., American Motors Corp. and the Jeep Corp.—all in the Automobile Manufacturers of America.

Ruling Challenged

6 petitions, challenged a 1971 ruling by NHTSA, arm of the Department of Transportation, which demanded installation of the passive safety devices.

Car manufacturers complained of a lack of uniformity "objectivity" in testing procedures for the restraint devices, which cited were airbags inflated automatically to on the shock to passengers the impact of an accident. The challenged safety standard requires that dummies be used in the airbags. Such tests, the manufacturers' appeal noted, "will not produce consistent, reliable or repeatable test results."

A court agreed, noting "that dummy as specified is inadequate for the testing purposes for which it is designed."

John C. Vincent, China Hand Fired by Dulles

NEW YORK, Dec. 5 (NYT).—John Carter Vincent, 72, a China specialist and former director of the State Department's Office of Far Eastern Affairs, died Sunday night in Cambridge, Mass. He had lived there since 1953, when he was summarily retired from the department by Secretary of State John Foster Dulles.

Mr. Vincent was high on the list of 81 State Department officials alleged to have Communist leanings. A loyalty review board found "reasonable doubt" about Mr. Vincent, a finding that Mr. Dulles reversed, although he simultaneously retired him on a pension of $6,200 a year.

In a diplomatic career that began in 1925, Mr. Vincent served extensively in China, and was counselor of the embassy in Chungking from 1942 to 1943. The following year he was chief of the State Department's division of Chinese affairs in Washington. He headed the Office of Far Eastern Affairs in 1945.

Mr. Vincent's troubles with Sen. McCarthy and the "China Lobby"—an informal but powerful group of congressmen and citizens supporting President Chiang Kai-shek of China—centered on the Marshall mission to China in 1945-47. This mission, headed by Gen. George C. Marshall, was sent by President Harry Truman partly to urge Chiang to cooperate with Mao Tse-tung's Communists to establish a stable national government.

A planner of the mission, Mr. Vincent was later accused of helping to draw up a directive to Gen. Marshall that placed impossible demands on Chiang.

Mr. Vincent was also accused of counseling the U.S. government—after the Marshall mission had failed—to temper sharply its military and economic aid to China. His argument was that Chiang was bound to lose the civil war then raging and that financial support to him would be money ill-spent. By 1949 the Chinese Communists were victorious and Chiang fled to Taiwan.

L. Francis Herreshoff
BOSTON, Dec. 5 (NYT).—L. Francis Herreshoff, 82, known as the dean of American yacht designers, died here Sunday after surgery for a broken hip. He had lived since 1945 on the harbor at Marblehead, Mass.

He prided himself on designing for the cost-conscious as well as the wealthy patron, and was credited with doing some of his best work in designs for the do-it-yourself builder in Rudder magazine.

Mr. Herreshoff was the builder of Whitwind, one of the 1930 contenders for the role of America's Cup defender. But he was perhaps best known for his ocean ketches, including the Araminta, Nereia and Ticonderoga.

Storm Kills 170 in South Philippines

Toll Expected to Rise; 19 Dead in Thailand

MANILA, Dec. 5 (Reuters).—About 170 persons were killed and hundreds of families were made homeless by the typhoon designated as Thelma, which swept through the southern Philippines Sunday, the National Red Cross reported today.

A spokesman said that many of those who died were drowned when about 500 homes were washed away in Misamis Oriental Province, 475 miles southeast of Manila.

He said that more reports were expected from other provinces and that the death toll probably would rise.

Heavy damage to the banana crop was reported in the province of Agusan del Sur in Mindanao and in the central Philippines province of Bohol.

Leaves Philippines
The typhoon moved away from the Philippines into the South China Sea early today.

Meanwhile, the death toll from the typhoon designated as Sally, which struck southern Thailand yesterday, rose to 19 today.

Gov. Aron Marabhecha of Surin Province said that a fishing boat with 10 crew members aboard was missing in the Gulf of Thailand.

Nine persons were reported killed on Samui Island off the coast of the province, 385 miles south of Bangkok, when the tropical storm swept across the island yesterday, he added.

Battle With Moslems

MANILA, Dec. 5 (AP).—Military forces of the Philippines have suffered serious casualties in the last five weeks in continuing clashes with heavily armed Moslem dissidents in the south.

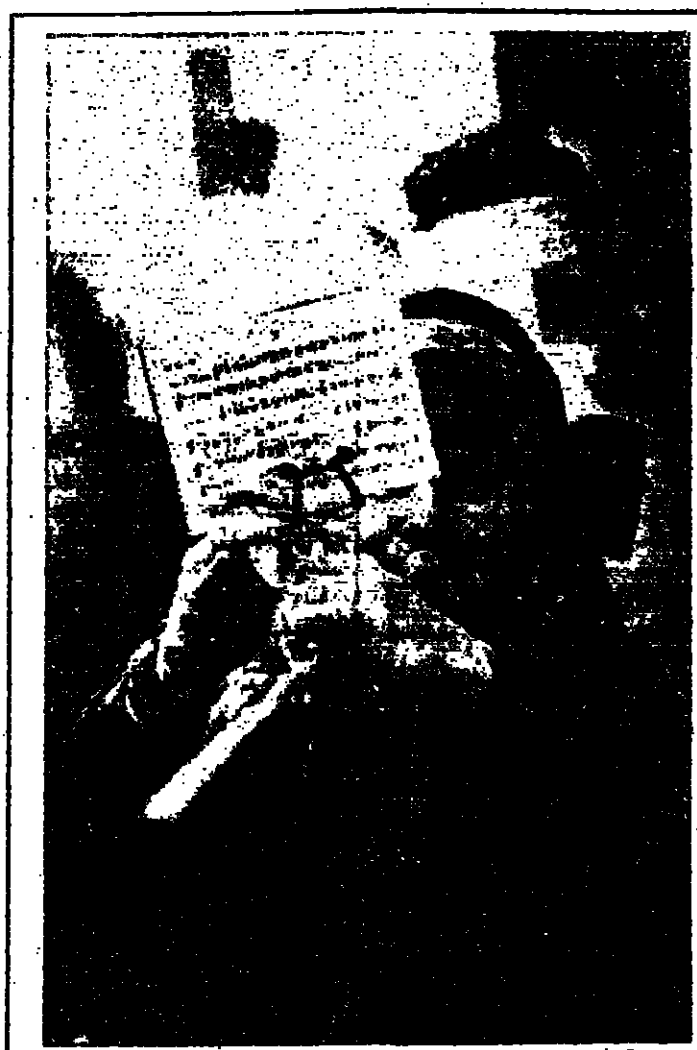

Military and government spokesmen privately admitted the fighting was going on, but refused to reveal any details.

There were estimates of 100 or more soldiers killed in fighting in Sulu Province and on Basilan Island.

One source said eight marines and two army men were killed last week in fighting in Jolo, Sulu Province, 590 miles south of Manila. There were also vague reports of villages being burned and unsuccessful assaults against Moslem positions.

There were no reports of the fighting in Manila's tightly controlled press. But President Ferdinand E. Marcos said last week that an entire "detachment" of soldiers was "wiped out" during fighting on Basilan Island, 560 miles south of the capital. Estimates of the government dead in that battle ranged from 14 to 20.

Military sources said the government is conducting a "massive" military effort against the Moslems that includes the use of F-8 Sabre jet fighter planes and medium artillery.

German Legal Aides Consider Reopening the Bormann Case

By David Binder

then have them analyzed with a view to getting the man identified as Bormann extradited to West Germany.

Mr. Farago, 66, also showed his documents, which he said consisted largely of top-secret Argentine intelligence reports, to Robert M.W. Kempner, former deputy chief counsel for the United States at the war crimes trial of Nazi leaders at Nuremberg.

Mr. Kempner, a 73-year-old lawyer who practices here and in Pennsylvania, said that he was persuaded the documents were authentic and added: "I will file arguments with the American Embassy in Bonn, also for transmission to the British, French and Soviet Embassies, arguments that the United States and its Allies should reopen the Bormann case within the framework of the international military tribunal."

Neither Mr. Metzner nor Mr. Kempner were sure which court would have precedence in any possible legal action in the case.

If the documents assembled by Mr. Farago prove to be authentic, it appears that Bormann escaped the Soviet Army's encirclement of Berlin, where he was reported to have been killed in a tank battle on May 1, 1945, shortly before the collapse of the Third Reich.

The documents begin with 1948 when they say Bormann arrived in Argentina with a passport supplied by the Vatican on the authority of Magr. Giovanni Battista Montini, the present Pope Paul VI. The Vatican has denied issuing such a passport.

Haven in Argentina
The documents assert that Bormann was received in Argentina by Gen. Jose Humberto Sosa Molina, war minister in the government of President Juan D. Peron, and given protection until Mr. Peron's fall in 1955. While in Argentina, the man described as Bormann was said to have used the name Hilmer Goldstein.

Later, moving about in Peru, Chile, Bolivia, Paraguay and Brazil, he reportedly assumed such names as Jose Perez, Juan Gomez and Ricardo Bauer. Mr. Farago said he had a Brazilian police report showing that the man left nine of his 10 fingerprints on a beer bottle and a drinking glass.

Mr. Farago asserted that the latest report was tape-recorded for him by an Argentine agent and that it said the fugitive had appeared in Mendoza, Argentina, on Oct. 6, 1971, after coming from a nightspot in the Argentine resort of Carlos de Berioch.

The author said that some of his informants had volunteered their material for ideological reasons and that others had insisted on being paid. He said that his informants had said that they had never been approached before on the Bormann matter by outsiders.

Honduras Quiet

After 137th Coup

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras, Dec. 5 (Reuters).—It was business as usual in this tiny Central American republic today after its 137th coup in 151 years brought the army chief, Gen. Oswaldo Lopez Arellano, back to power.

As the new president tightened his grip on the country following yesterday's bloodless coup, shops, offices and banks stayed open and life continued as usual. The only outward sign that a coup had taken place was martial music broadcast on the radio.

Gen. Lopez acted as 20,000 peasants marched on the capital demanding land reforms. Hearing that he had taken power, the peasants called off the march.

IRA Steps Up Ulster War; 4 Are Killed

British Army Slays Worker by Mistake

BELFAST, Dec. 5.—Four men died violently in Northern Ireland today as guerrillas of the Irish Republican Army unleashed a rocket, bomb, mortar and sniper offensive across the province.

Army headquarters said that within a one-hour period 1 rocket, mortar and sniper shell were fired at various military positions.

In Belfast, a soldier was killed when a homemade mortar bomb blew up in his face in a yard behind a Roman Catholic convent, the army said.

One civilian bystander and one suspected gunman were shot dead as troops countered the IRA on the streets. One part-time militia man, a member of the volunteer Ulster Defense Regiment, was killed by a sniper as he drove his wife and children through a quiet village street.

The deaths raised Northern Ireland's known fatality toll from three years of strife to 654.

British soldiers killed a plumber and wounded another today in the mistaken belief that pieces of pipe they carried were rifles, the army said.

"It appears the soldiers made a mistake and the men were innocent," an army spokesman said. "The troops saw and shot the two men in a derelict house previously used by snipers after gunmen opened fire on a military outpost in the Roman Catholic Ardoyne district, he said. It was in this same neighborhood that soldiers killed a 16-year-old gunman last night.

An army spokesman said that the two men apparently ran to the windows of the house with pieces of pipe and tools in their hands when they heard the gunfire.

"The army deeply regrets their death and injury," the spokesman said.

He said that the dead man was a Protestant and the injured man was a Catholic. The two had been repairing damaged homes for the Northern Ireland Housing Authority.

Meanwhile, British soldiers seized three top leaders of the IRA Provisional wing in raids on former IRA strongholds in Belfast. They were a company commander, a recruiting officer and a financial officer, the spokesman said.

Police in Ulster and Britain continued to tighten surveillance at ports and airfields in anticipation of an exodus of IRA leaders from the Irish Republic.

Statuette Found By Farmer in U.K. Sells for £36,750

LONDON, Dec. 5 (INT).—A 12th-century gilt bronze statuette of St. John the Evangelist dug up by a farm worker last May was sold at auction today for £36,750.

Arthur Davey, 42, who attended the sale at Christie's in London, found the statuette (3 3/4 inches high) while hoeing weeds on a farm near Bury St. Edmunds. It is believed to have been made by a craftsman specializing in such work near Liège circa 1180, a spokesman for the auctioneering firm said.

Mr. Davey carried the statuette around in his pocket and eventually gave it to his son who tried unsuccessfully to swap it for a toy car. Later, Mr. Davey took the statuette to a nearby farmer with a knowledge of antiques who, in turn, brought it to the auctioneers' attention.

The statuette was in a sale of medieval and Renaissance sculpture which made £174,058.

Paris Sale
PARIS, Dec. 5 (INT).—A 1916 Renoir, "Roses," was sold last night at the Palais Galleries for $80,000 francs. It was one of 110 paintings auctioned by the Ad. Pichard and Tajan group.

Other high prices: $30,000 francs for "La Route de Saint-Oy" by Louisa-Clémentine painted circa 1870 by Pissarro; $10,000 francs, "Le Pont du Chemin de Fer," painted in 1880 by Alfred Sisley; and $80,000 francs for Delacroix's "Cavalier Arabe."

Swiss Lower House Votes to End Cavalry

BERN, Dec. 5 (Reuters).—The National Council, the lower house of the Swiss parliament, voted today to abolish the cavalry and switch the Swiss dragoons from horses to tanks.

The 91-71 vote backed up last week's decision by the upper house, the Council of States, that Switzerland should equip its 3,000 steel-helmeted dragoons—Europe's last active cavalry force—with tanks by the end of the next year as part of a modernization program.

The cavalry, the government argued, lacked the firepower to defend Switzerland's neutrality. More than 400,000 persons signed a petition to keep the dragoons on horseback claiming they are more mobile in the wooded, hilly, border country.

THEATER IN PARIS

A Distortion of Corneille's 'Cid'

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss

PARIS, Dec. 5 (UPI).—Proust wrote that there is a strong element of the grotesque in every masterpiece. There is such a "bad streak" of the irrational in the plays of Corneille that the critics have declared him a mad brother. The argument of his most celebrated masterpiece, "Le Cid," is so only in a remote, but, with the Aristotelian timetable forced on it, downright impossible. The argument of his most celebrated masterpiece, "Le Cid," is so only in a remote, but, with the Aristotelian timetable forced on it, downright impossible. The argument of his most celebrated masterpiece, "Le Cid," is so only in a remote, but, with the Aristotelian timetable forced on it, downright impossible.

A scene from the Théâtre de la Ville production of "Le Cid."

presence and rhetorical delivery which—amid the shattering revisions—makes him seem like a romantic prince trapped on stage during the progress of an unorganized musical comedy. To embroider the tableaux, a ruffian-collared fop, ensconced in a high-backed oak chair, reads in Spanish from a volume commemorating the mighty deeds of Le Cid.

"Le Cid" has few rivals in poetic grandeur. But the most beautiful face viewed through a magnifying glass becomes distorted, the pleasing ensemble of its features divided. Morca's operation on the Corneille chief d'œuvre has like effect.

Stéphane Lissner, an ambitious director-producer, has opened a new theater, Le Théâtre Mécanique at 35 Avenue Rapp, Paris 7. One wishes him well, but his choice for his first show—the Pip Simmons Theatre Group in "Alice in Wonderland"—is bizarre. It is difficult to describe and on Sunday evening a portion of the audience found it impossible to sit through.

The company is English and performs in English. The setting is a Victorian conservatory, crowded with potted palms. Plants have been placed in the auditorium. Alice in the prim white dress of the Tenniel drawings serves as mistress of ceremonies, insulting the assembled before the show starts and carelessly watering the flowerbeds in the room so that those close to them get watered, too.

The performers, as though with hysterical compulsion, recite the Lewis Carroll text and set out bits of it according to their exotic interpretation. At various points they assault the audience, sometimes climbing monkey-like over those occupying front row seats, rushing up and down the aisles poking and nudging the surprised spectators. All the players have raucous voices and comport themselves as inmates of a lunatic asylum. There is a second Alice, a bewitched transvestite who, protruding, emits falsetto shrieks. The interpretive aggression is quite alarming and the female Alice—who loses her lace drawers at one point for comic relief—violently chops up an orange towards the finale and flings the fragments at the customers to the marked disrelish of some. This hydrophobic Alice—which has been touring the Continent and is scheduled for an engagement at the Upstairs Theatre of the Royal Court in London—will be at the Théâtre Mécanique through Dec. 9. It is to be followed on Dec. 14 by "La Demande d'Emploi" by Michel Vinaver which had its premiere at the Avignon festival last summer.

Louis Ducreux's new production of Offenbach's "Orphée aux Enfers" (at the Théâtre de la Musique) is a handsome spectacle with jewel box decor by Deni, Martin and gay, flamboyant period costumes by Jean-Denis Maleles in which Second Empire opulence and boulevard mythology have been wittily blended. The Paris Opéra ballet (Troupe Favart) has been recruited for the choreographic numbers and dances the celebrated cancan with a mad abandon that exhilarates the generous revival. Anne-Marie Sanial, as dainty as an 1860 cameo figure, sings Burydice prettily and Jean Brun is a hearty Jupiter. The rendition of the insect duet by these two was the occasion for show-stopping applause. Albert Voli is an admirable Orphée. Jean Giraudou provides a welcome low-comedy Philo and Francis Rousset a happy Mercury. The Huzar, Crémieux-Ludovic Halévy book, though its general line has been retained, has been somewhat renovated. The Métro entrance now represents the gates of hell, a modern satirical pun. The swirling score is as entrancing as ever and the deluxe resurrection is in the nature of a holiday gift.

José Limon: An Eagle of the Dance

By Clive Barnes

NEW YORK (UPI).—As a man he was austere, grave and kindly. There was a courtliness to his every gesture and he moved through the world like a prince. As a dancer he was an eagle. As a choreographer he was extremely gifted and fluent. He was never a particularly innovative artist, but possessed an innate understanding of that fusion of dance, drama and music that is the core of his work. He has left half a dozen ballets, at least, that should find a permanent place in the American repertory.

José Limon, who died Saturday at the age of 64, once wrote: "I view myself as a disciple and follower of Isadora Duncan and of the American Impetus as exemplified by Doris Humphrey and Martha Graham, and by their vision of the dance as an art capable of the sublimity of tragedy and the Dionysian ecstasies." Limon's career consistently gave flesh to those visions. He created images, he created dances and he created dancers.

He was a dance leader and took his position seriously. As a teacher for many years at the Juilliard School, he conducted classes that were notable for their clarity, precision and care. He seemed a fine and private man, but I think he loved America, traditions and disciplines.

Of the man as a dancer, what will be recalled? When I first saw him dance he was 48 years old, and still, I imagine, pretty much at his best. His dancing had a quality that can best be expressed as moral fervor. He had a magnificently sculptured head, and a body that seemed to brood. So far as his presence went, it could perhaps, in our day and age, be compared on dance terms only with the ballet dancer Leonide Massine. It was hypnotic. No, even more, it was almost tangible. Certainly on stage he lacked wit. He never contracted the elfin nature of one of his chief teachers, Charles Weidman, and this was a loss. Yet his leadership and integrity were unquestionable. As a choreographer Limon must be regarded as one of America's greatest. For all the early years of his company, until his death in 1968, his artistic mentor was Doris Humphrey.

In the post-Humphrey years his genius blazed as bright as ever, but was unnamed and unrefined. Despite his almost prim exterior, he had that kind of Dionysian talent that never knew when to stop. But how much greater is that than a talent that never knows when to start. American dance today would be a very different thing had it not been for José Limon.

The violinist Christian Ferras is the recitalist for five 6:30 p.m. concerts this week, through Dec. 9, at the Théâtre de la Ville in Paris, with Jean-Claude Ambrosini as pianist. The program includes Bach's Partita No. 2, Debussy's Sonata and Ravel's "Tzigane."

The Troupe Favart of the Paris Opéra ballet, along with several principal dancers of the main company, will give a series of performances at the Théâtre de la Musique (ex-Gaité-Lyrique) in Paris from Dec. 6 to Jan. 4 at 8:30 p.m. The programs include "Firebird" (Stravinsky-Béjart), "Cantadagio" (Mahler-Lazzini), "Unfinished Symphony" (Schubert-Van Dyk), "Bolero" (Ravel-Béjart), and "Dyade" (Prokofiev-Charrat).

Bellini's "I Puritani," in a concert version, will be performed Dec. 7 at the Maison de l'ORTF in Paris with Vasso Papantonios as Elvira, Bruce Brewer as Arturo, Nicola Ghiuselev as Giorgio and Vicente Sardinero as Riccardo. Pierre-Michel Le Conte will conduct the French Radio Lyric Orchestra and Chorus.

Françoise Gangloff-Levechin will give the second organ recital of the series, "Orgue Pour Notre Temps," Dec. 6 at Saint-Denis au Marais, 88 Rue de Turenne, Paris.

The opening concert of the Domaine Musical's 20th season, on Dec. 11 at the Théâtre de la Ville, comprises three works being given their first performances in Paris—György Ligeti's "Mélodie," Gilbert Amy's "Celle Etude Enseigne à l'Enfance" and Vinko Globokar's "Airs de Voyages Vers l'Interieur." Amy will conduct the Domaine ensemble and other participants will be the clarinetist Michel Portal, Globokar playing the trombone, pianists Christian Ivaldi and Georges Pludermacher, the Schola Cantorum of Stuttgart and the French Radio Chamber Chorus.

The American choreographer Cliff Kauter has been commissioned by the Nederlands Dans Theater to create a new work for the company. It will be done to an orchestral score composed for it by John Herbert McDowell.

New productions scheduled for December at the newly opened Darmstadt Staatstheater are Wagner's "Die Meistersinger," conducted by Hans Drewanz, staged by Kurt Horres, designed by Hanna Jordan and Edit Bickup, with Herbert Grabe as Hans Sachs (Dec. 25 in the large theater); Büchner's "Woyzeck," staged by Rolf Stahl, with Rudolf Brand in the title part (Dec. 18, small theater); and Brecht's "Fichtelberggespräche" (Refugee Conversations) staged by Volker Linack in the workshop theater.

A performance of the first part of Bach's Christmas Oratorio at the Church of St. Thomas in Leipzig, where the composer was cantor, will be broadcast directly by the East German long-wave transmitter (185 kilocycles) on Dec. 10 at 3:05 p.m. The soloists, the St. Thomas Boys' Choir and the Gewandhaus Orchestra will be conducted by Hans-Joachim Rotzsch, present-day successor to Bach as Thomaskantor.

The English Chamber Orchestra under Raymond Leppard will give three concerts in Paris Dec. 12 at the Eglise des Invalides, Dec. 13 at the Salle Pleyel and Dec. 14 (at 10:30 p.m.) at the Théâtre Sylvia Monfort. The soprano Janet Baker will be soloist at the first two concerts. The programs concentrate on music of the 17th and 18th centuries, with works by Monteverdi, Dowland, Boyce, Handel, Haydn and Mozart, among others.

The State of State

President Nixon has decided to preserve unchanged the imbalance in the making of foreign policy, at least until his prime international objective—peace in Vietnam—is achieved. That is the plain import of his reappointment of Secretary of State Rogers, coupled with his announcement that Henry A. Kissinger will stay in the White House.

Understandable as is the President's unwillingness to make any fundamental shift while Vietnam remains unsettled, the second-line changes he has instituted at the State Department can hardly be considered a long-range answer to the institutional erosion caused in that department by the creation of a dual State Department inside the White House.

Though Mr. Nixon appears convinced that competition between White House advisers and the established departments of government enhances creativity, recent experience demonstrates that it also provokes demoralization and wasteful in-fighting down the line. As it now stands, there is precious little competition between the State Department and the White House National Security staff. Mr. Kissinger built his own admirable institution by raiding State of some of its best brains; those remaining, with a few exceptions, seem to roll over and play dead before the dazzle of the extended President.

As two veterans of the foreign affairs bureaucracy, Anthony Lake and Leslie H. Gelb have argued recently, someone has to provide the policy follow-through after dramatic presidential initiatives. Too often State is inadequate in this because of its pathetic exclusion from the initial policymaking.

Even more serious, the present structure effectively bars congressional access to the real foreign policymakers, who snuggle warmly into the shelter of executive privilege. Thus is embodied the elite diplomatist's dream of conducting his affairs free from the bothersome scrutiny of democratic process. It was bad enough for President Nixon to face the electorate through "surrogates"; it is inexcusable to apply this same tactic to frustrate Congress in its advisory responsibilities.

Renewal of the Rogers-Kissinger tenure may be only a stopgap. It should not preclude a long-needed structural overhaul of the foreign policymaking machine. Pending that needed change, the designation as key aides to Secretary Rogers of Kenneth Rush and William J. Casey will bring new strength and assertiveness to State. Mr. Rush arrives as under secretary from the equivalent No. 2 job in the Pentagon, where he won high marks; he also combined diplomatic shrewdness and sensitivity in handling the four-power negotiations on Berlin. Mr. Casey, now chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, will insure that State has a proper role in the international trade and monetary planning that is bound to be a major feature of the second Nixon administration.

Frustration in Holland

Few developments are so frustrating for a democratic country as a national election that fails to break a serious political stalemate. More than 82 percent of the voters went to the polls in the Netherlands last week, but the outcome left none of 26 competing parties strong enough to form a workable government on its own or with likely allies.

The center-right coalition that has governed for 18 months emerged with a paper majority of one in a lower house of 150, but disunion and defection in two of its parties would make continuity difficult in any event.

As the number of parties indicates, Dutch political instability of recent years is the end result of proportional representation carried to absurdity. Fourteen parties held seats in the outgoing lower house elected last year. At least a dozen will be represented in the new chamber. This proportional representation system derives from commendable zeal to protect the rights of each minority in a nation of 13 million made up of minorities. But the result is a fractionalized society with weak governments based on shifting coalitions.

Former Premier Barend Blesheuveld predicts that the assembling of a new government to replace his coalition may take as long as three months. His government will remain in office meanwhile as a caretaker regime with no real authority to tackle pressing problems including an 8 percent inflation rate. Like Belgium, its Benelux neighbor, Holland has contributed much to the building of new postwar institutions in Europe for economic cooperation and mutual defense. But like Belgium, now also mired in political deadlock, the Dutch have yet to fashion political institutions that can cope with baffling change and maintain stability at home.

Talking in Korea

The slow pace of negotiations between the regimes of North and South Korea need provoke neither surprise nor dismay. It is still little short of stunning that these long-implacable rivals are in fact talking to each other at all.

In the seven months since talks began, the two sides have agreed to end their decades of bitterly hostile propaganda. Through Red Cross auspices, arrangements are underway to reunite families torn apart by the division of their country in 1945. A North-South coordinating committee has been organized, with significantly high representation on both sides, to pursue the political dialogue aimed at eventual reunification.

Attitudes of the two regimes differ on how the dialogue should proceed: the Communist regime of Pyongyang wants to plunge right into discussion of the political future, while the South Koreans favor more gradual, step-by-step progress on nonpolitical and humanitarian issues to build confidence before the political issues at the core are raised. But the mere fact of talks in process acts as a damper on the mutual belligerence to which a generation of Koreans has grown accustomed.

The United States, in common with other powers, has wisely managed to keep hands off this internal dialogue so far, but it may not be able to stay aloof much longer. A critical element in the Korean confrontation has been the anachronistic presence of a UN command, remnant of the era when the Koreans were shooting instead of talking.

President Chung Hee Park used his expeditionary force of 40,000 South Korean soldiers in Vietnam as leverage to insure that the United States would resist pressure mounting at the UN to wind down this symbolic presence. That leverage is now itself winding down.

There is nothing sacrosanct about preserving the UN flag in Korea, particularly if it stands as a reminder of hostilities between two regimes which are moving toward reconciliation. By now, its removal would be more cosmetic than substantial; American military aid to South Korea could still be maintained under bilateral arrangements even after the UN cover were withdrawn.

If the United States does not take an initiative to reconsider the UN role in Korea, it might find itself on the defensive and outvoted on the issue at next year's General Assembly.

International Opinion

Moscow and Marxist Chile

Chile's pioneering experiment in the supposedly democratic transition to Marxism is, after two years under President Allende, in a crucial phase. Mr. Allende marches bravely under an increasingly threadbare democratic banner and bangs the Marxist drum. But he also carries the begging bowl of the aspirant Russian satellite. Russia will now have to decide how much it would be worth to keep aloft both a Marxist Chile and the fiction that the transition to and from Communism (despite the Brezhnev doctrine of "once a Communist country, always a Communist country") can be made smoothly and naturally through the ballot box. With a Front Populaire election alliance already agreed in France and with a powerful Communist party in an unsettled Italy, Moscow will probably decide that Mr. Allende's Marxism is a growth industry worth supporting.

Seventy-Five Years Ago

December 6, 1897

LONDON—The Daily Chronicle reports that the successful conversion of silver into gold has been accomplished by an American chemist, Mr. Emmens, of New York. Statements to this effect, says the Chronicle, are certainly definite enough, and if they are true bimetalism will have its quietus and alchemy its justification. The report states that between April and November, nineteen ingots of gold have been produced from silver.

Fifty Years Ago

December 6, 1923

NEW YORK—The selection of Timothy M. Healy as the first Governor General of the Irish Free State is a piece of rare tact. The sneers of the irreconcilables were ready for the arrival of some titled Briton, sneers which would say to Ireland that she was free in name only. And now, in addition to the Parliament, which is 100 percent Irish, comes a governor-general who might be called 101 percent Irish. A "Coromondian" ascends a throne.

Youth Power: Making a Difference

By David S. Broder

BOSTON.—At a panel discussion on the impact of the youth vote in the 1972 election here the other day, a young woman in the audience asked Caryl Rivers Lupo, the Boston commentator, "Whatever made people think four years ago that young people would change the world?"

Mrs. Lupo, who looks just barely past the terrible over-30 divide herself, replied that a great many youth movement leaders had made that claim themselves in the 1960s, and that some of us in the press had done them the courtesy of taking them seriously.

It was as good an answer as any of us on the panel could have made. But the significance of the exchange was in the question, not the answer.

Skepticism

Several hundred students from some 45 New England colleges turned out for the seminar on American political trends cosponsored by the John F. Kennedy Library and Boston University. So far as one could discern from their comments and questions, their basic attitude is one of great skepticism about their generation's capacity to "change things." Their description of their peers' mood added to the question: "What's the use?"

As it happened, there was living proof before their eyes of the political potency of young people. Joseph L. Biden Jr., the Democratic senator-elect from Delaware, who won his seat last month before he reached the constitutional minimum age of 30 for serving in the Senate, was there to show them how insignificant the age barrier to high office really is.

Biden's message was that the most powerful weapon in his successful campaign against Sen. J. Caleb Boggs (R., Del.) was a host of high school students. Not only did these 13-to-17-year-olds hand-deliver three statewide mailouts for him (thus saving the campaign $200,000), they carried word home personally to their parents that they had found a politician who was "different from the rest," honest, open and willing to listen. "We won the election in the high schools," Biden said, "even though 90 percent of them couldn't vote."

The listening college students' skepticism about "youth power" is understandable as a reaction to their older brothers' and sisters' exaggerated hopes about how they were going to change the system.

Big Difference

Young people have made an enormous difference in America in the past decade. Two movements likely to be remembered in the history books—the civil rights movement and the peace movement—drew their impetus and much of their leadership from the young.

As those movements suggest, young people have shown remarkable talent for bringing issues into the national political arena. Their frustration stems from the fact that they have had considerably less success in securing the results they sought once their causes were made the matter of national political bargaining.

The reason, it seems to me, is that the members of the under-30 generation have not mastered the art of national coalition-building. Whether it was civil rights, a Vietnam settlement, Eugene McCarthy or George McGovern they were promoting, they have ultimately failed to find the allies they needed to build a national majority support for their positions.

This is not said in criticism. Most politicians of mature years fail the demanding tests of national politics. As Sam Brown, one of the brightest of the under-30 generation, pointed out, there are inherent limitations on any effort to anchor a national coalition on the college campuses.

The "failure" of the youth movement is a failure only if the young people take it as such. What several of the panelists—including Biden and Mrs. Lupo—tried to say was that there need be no such despair.

When young people have sought a more attainable goal—a local majority coalition behind some cause or candidate—they have, more often than not, been successful. By reducing the scale of their ambitions, they have brought their objective within reach.

Biden's own campaign in Delaware shows the potential payoff in choosing a small arena. So does an anti-freeway coalition in Boston of which Mrs. Lupo spoke. Brown and his colleagues from the McCarthy campaign and the Vietnam Moratorium movement, David Moxner, this year reduced their scale of operations from the international and national scene to Denver and helped score signal victories in an environmentalist fight against the Winkler Olympics and in a House and Senate campaign.

Other veterans of past national efforts turned up in dozens of local campaigns this fall.

It is quite true that we have not had the "greening of America." But we are witnessing a more complex political process in which young people recruited and trained in national movements return to their local precincts and achieve significant political change.

In the long run, the results of this "bottom-up" strategy are likely to be more important and enduring than the "quick-fix" or "top-down" youth revolution that seemed fashionably imminent in the 1960s.

That may not resolve the doubts Mrs. Lupo's questioner—and so many other young people—seem to express. But it is the best answer a member of the older generation, unaccustomed to being an optimist, can offer. One hopes the under-30 generation, with all its promise, will discover its own, better reasons not to drop out.

Where Is the Ice Drifting?

By C. L. Sulzberger

PARIS.—The world has now spun into a curiously intricate era of multipolarity. Some Western alliances are being buried, just as the Sino-Soviet pact was long ago interred, and others face alteration. Various power coalitions suddenly find themselves pitted against each other in differing patterns on differing issues and on differing occasions.

One alliance which seems dead even if not yet officially unburied is SEATO. Never a valid organization, it was originally devised by Secretary of State Dulles to give him authority through special treaty protocols to get the United States mixed up in the Indochina war.

France hasn't participated in SEATO for years. Pakistan had become a nonparticipant and this year formally opted out. Now the new Labor governments of Australia and New Zealand intend to opt the pact. This leaves only the United States, Britain, Thailand and the Philippines as theoretically active members.

Paring Forces

Australia, withdrawing commitments abroad and paring its armed forces, is likewise getting out of ANZUS, a little known pact with New Zealand and the United States, and ANZAM, a still less familiar arrangement with Britain, Singapore and Malaysia.

Both Australia and New Zealand are ending even their regional conscription. The same trend is far more important in the number one Western alliance, NATO.

The United States terminates the draft and switches to volunteer forces by July 1.

This cannot help but be reflected in the extent and size of America's European garrison. West Germany seems headed in the same direction. The end result will necessitate revision of NATO defense plans and probable heavier reliance on tactical nuclear weapons.

Communist alliances are not at this moment subject to similar shifts. The big initial changes had already occurred when, years ago, Yugoslavia and Albania successively quit the Moscow Treaty network which became formalized in the Warsaw Pact, and when Peking broke with Moscow.

Romanian membership in the pact continues, despite Bucharest's resentment of Soviet interference in Czechoslovakia. There doesn't seem to be any thought that Ceausescu contemplates abandoning his alliance.

Today one sees a new tendency of world power groupings to play a continually shifting game of musical chairs. One has but to examine the list of trouble spots to see how impossible it is to catalogue diplomatic positions as was done in stultified cold war days.

The question of a united Germany used to be the first pre-occupation of both Europe and America. But now, although no European capital officially admits it, almost all of them, regardless of ideology, are content with the prospect that two separate Germanys will exist for an indeterminate future. On this issue Moscow blatantly opposes German unification but, Washington and Peking favor it.

The United States and China both support Pakistan in its arguments with India although the degree of American backing has lessened since the creation of Bangladesh and Pakistan withdrawal from SEATO. Moscow remains solidly behind India on just about every issue.

Although neither talks about it in public, it is clear the American and Russians secretly support the Khambha guerrillas fighting against the Chinese administration in Tibet. Likewise, Washington and Moscow are more sympathetic to Taiwan than Peking likes.

In Vietnam, both Moscow and Peking back Hanoi in its efforts to gain Indochinese ascendancy and both have sent massive aid. China wants to establish its strong influence in the area while Russia hopes to sponsor a neutral, anti-Peking, anti-Washington belt of states there.

Mideast Free-for-All

Finally, in the Middle East, a diplomatic free-for-all prevails. The United States backs Israel although it earnestly wishes it could produce a compromise peace that would enable American relationships with the Arabs to improve. Russia has been badly kicked in its pride by Egypt and is on the outs with Libya but still has a strong pro-Arab position in the United Nations and power bases in Syria and Iraq.

China, less immediately concerned, has been a steadfast supporter of the more extreme factions among the Palestine Arab guerrillas. Peking hopes to whittle down both the American and Soviet positions by such a maneuver which costs more in words than in money or material.

From this cursory survey it becomes obvious that what we are now entering is an age of movement and constant change in the diplomatic stream. The cold war ice has thawed and now breaks into easily shifting kaleidoscope patterns. Nobody knows in what direction the floor are headed.

A Union Man On Nixon's New Team

By A. H. Raskin

NEW YORK—When President Nixon squeaked to his first victory four years ago, organized labor's secret service kept feeding panicky communists to the AFL-CIO high command about big-business pressure on the White House to break up union "monopolies" and return labor to a pastoral state of impotence. Now that a triumphantly re-elected Nixon is moving for a permanent realignment of American politics, with blue-collar workers as a principal building block in his "new majority," the chiefs of many giant corporations are doing at least as much worrying about the President's intentions as the staunchest of the Democrats in labor's divided hierarchy.

Mr. Nixon's appointment of New York hardhat Peter J. Brennan as Secretary of Labor is being read in both industry and labor as a signal that the President intends to transfer to the national scene the "great am nice" prescription Gov. Rockefeller has been using successfully for more than a decade to build bridges between labor and the Republicans in this state. But the question to which no one in either camp yet has any answer is how much of the Rockefeller formula Mr. Nixon intends to apply at the White House—whether he will go beyond surface cordial expressions of cordiality to policy concessions in areas where labor and the GOP have traditionally collided.

'Ego Massage'

One unionist with years of close exposure to the governor's endowment technique describes it this way: "One part is straight ego massage—invitations to intimate dinners at the executive mansion and at least one big bash a year where the governor gets his picture taken with his arm around you—but that wouldn't do it alone even with a plotter like Rockefeller putting on the puddy act."

Two other elements make it all come together. One is taking the padlock off the public treasury to pave the state with massive projects like the Albany Mall and the many campuses of the State University, a plentiful source of jobs for the dominant building trades. The other is the governor's support of liberalism in such fields as the minimum wage, unemployment insurance and workmen's compensation. "Never forget," says this Rockefeller-watcher, "the governor didn't just butter us up—he also produced for us."

Obviously, the opportunities for "producing" in this sense are vastly greater in Washington than in Albany.

The start of the 93d Congress next month will provide a test of how much further down the trail the President plans to go in his effort to lure labor away from its forty-year alliance with the Democrats. The AFL-CIO will be pressing for swift adoption of the Senate Labor Committee's bill to raise the minimum wage from $1.60 an hour to $2—a bill the administration helped scuttle last fall. Even more fundamental tests will come over union demands for "fairer balance" in wage-price controls and over George Meany's expressed view that the heavy vote for labor-endorsed congressional candidates—90 percent of them Democrats—represents a mandate for accelerated progress in social programs now slated to feel the Nixon economy ax.

Showdowns Coming

It is the imminence of showdowns on all these issues that has caused many industrialists to view the designation of a Labor secretary from the building trades—"copyright owners in wage-push inflation"—as a harbinger of disaster. "There is going to have to be an early political confrontation between the Brennan viewpoint and the needs of the country," says a top official of one of the country's half dozen biggest companies. "This is a case of payola in Macy's window."

Ironically, there is more enthusiasm than enthusiasm in top labor for the Brennan appointment. Though all the leadership has rushed forward with congratulations, Mr. Meany, who sat on the fence through the presidential campaign, is not eager to seem to be sitting in Mr. Nixon's lap now. To labor's McGovern wing, the New Yorker epitomizes conservatism. Even among the pro-labor-conservative building trades presidents, there is some reserve about the elevation of a regional satrap.

Say Mr. Brennan's champion, "Peter'll show them. He's a decent guy and he'll grow in the job just the way George Meany did." But at AFL-CIO headquarters, bets are already being taken that the new Labor secretary won't outlast the nine months Martin Luther King of the Plumbers Union lasted in the Eisenhower cabinet.

It said the purchase price will reflect several adjustments and assumption by the purchaser of certain liabilities and, therefore cannot be immediately disclosed. A final agreement is expected to be signed by Jan. 1, 1973.

Purchase of Beech-Nut's baby food operation, which had sales last year of $69 million, would mark the first entry into the United States market by Cavenham.

BRIDGE

By Alan Truscott

In rubber bridge, with a series of different partners, partnership understanding is necessarily limited, and adaptability and psychology become major factors. An example occurred on the diagrammed deal.

South might well have made a forcing opening, since he had good prospects of making ten tricks in a spade contract, but he contented himself with one spade. West's pre-emptive bid put pressure on North, who scraped up a bid of four spades—clearly an overbid since two spades would have been sufficient if West had passed the opening bid.

Even allowing for the fact that North had bid under pressure, South had no hesitation in moving toward slam. Blackwood disclosed that an ace was missing and that a grand slam was out of reach. East should have passed, but his honor strength caused him to think that the slam was beatable—he was right—and he doubled.

The club queen was led, and the declarer sized up his situation. He felt sure that East's double was based on all three missing trumps and the diamond ace. He would have given a lot to trade the spade nine for one of dummy's trumps so that he could lead for a finesse and hold the lead in dummy.

But there was a chance of overcoming this problem if the defense was not alert, so South glanced to his right and was satisfied with what he saw: East did not seem likely to rise to any occasions.

After winning the club lead, South led to the heart king and cashed the ace, discarding a diamond. Next he casually led the spade six from dummy, and equally casually East produced the deuce. Backing his psychological judgment, South played the four from his hand and was rewarded when West showed out. It was then an easy matter to finesse again and claim the slam, conceding one diamond trick.

The unexpected deep finesse cost the defense 2,420 points.

62: A MODEL KIT

By Julio Cortazar. Translated from Spanish by Gregory Rabassa. Pantheon, 281 pp. $6.95.

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

In a preface to "62: A Model Kit," Julio Cortazar says: "The reader's opinion, his personal montage of the elements of the tale, will in each case be the book he has chosen to read." In view of what follows, this is like inviting people to dinner and when they arrive, hungry and expectant, handing them a bag of groceries.

But already I can hear the author protesting: I'm underestimating you. You're fed up with the predigested pap tossed off by traditional novelists. You've been prepared, by the history of literature, so to speak, to accept such options. The passive reader is a thing of the past.

OK, let's open up the model kit and see whether you can put it together. If it's all right with you, I'll just up-end the bag on your lap and let you take it from there. Here you go.

Nicolas loves Marrast, and he loves her, only something went wrong with their love one day when they were out walking and saw some red houses along a road, and now they're miserable. Marrast is so miserable, in fact, that he can relieve himself only by writing a letter to Neurotics Anonymous advising them to study a little-known portrait in the Courtauld Institute of London.

Juan loves Helene, who lives in Paris, but he is in Vienna with her. He is a Scandinavian girl. Together, Juan and Helene are an old woman in their hotel who may or may not be sleeping with a young English girl. Helene has mixed feelings about Juan, but makes love to Celia, who has just run away from home, because Celia reminds her of a doll Tell had sent her and because at the hospital where she works Helene has witnessed the death of a young man who reminded her of Juan.

Austin is a former member of Neurotics Anonymous who has been picked up by Marrast as he was in the Courtauld Institute studying the aforementioned portrait. Marrast gives French lessons to Austin, and Austin confesses himself daily to Polanco, who, like Calac, is a South American friend of Marrast. Feuille Morte is a girl who just occupies a chair or a seat in a train. Osvaldo is a small belonging either to Calac or Polanco.

Austin has been having bad luck with bossy prostitutes who won't let him perform in the ordinary way. When Celia flees to London to escape Helene, Austin meets her and falls in love. They spend an ecstatic night together. Juan goes to Paris and spends an ecstatic night with Helene. Tell tries to console Feuille Morte for being left out of things and Nicole, who has been abandoned by Marrast, hitchhikes a ride on a barge. Calac and Polanco argue in nonsense.

Nebraska Back Beats Pruitt

Heisman Vote to Rodgers

NEW YORK, Dec. 5 (UPI)—Johnny Rodgers, Nebraska, an electrifying triple-threat runner who averaged 13.8 yards every time he touched the ball during a three-year varsity career, today was named the winner of the 1972 Heisman Trophy as the outstanding college football player in the nation.

In capturing college football's most coveted prize, the 5-foot-9, 175-pound senior overcame an initial campaign, concentrated on the East and the South, since his selection because of great off-the-field clashes with a law.

Rodgers, who became the first Nebraska player to win the Heisman Trophy, outdistanced running back Greg Pruitt of Oklahoma and middle guard Rich Glover of Nebraska in the balloting of 834 sportswriters and sportscasters.

Rodgers received 1,310 points to 966 points for Pruitt and 652 for Glover.

Quarterback Burt Jones of Louisiana State was fourth in the balloting, followed by Terry Davis of Alabama, quarterback John Hufnagel of Penn State and George Amundson of Iowa State.

Completing the top 10 were running back Otis Armstrong of Purdue, quarterback Don Strock of Virginia Tech and quarterback Gary Huff of Florida State.

Rodgers, despite many pressures to deny him the award, was the top vote-getter in all five sections of the country.

17 Touchdowns
Rodgers' career at Nebraska has been one of the most illustrious in college football history, and he was particularly outstanding this season. Used as a runner, pass catcher and return specialist by coach Bob Devaney, Rodgers averaged 123.8 yards a game total yardage and scored 17 touchdowns this season.

As a rusher, he gained 697 yards and scored seven touchdowns, as a pass receiver he caught 55 passes and scored eight touchdowns, as a punt returner he averaged 15.8 yards a return and scored two touchdowns and on kickoffs he averaged 18.7 yards a kickoff.

His three-year overall offensive totals are the best in history for a major-league player. Rodgers gained 5,536 total yards over three years, an average of 184.3 a game, and he scored 45 touchdowns. He averaged a touchdown every 15.8 yards and he handled the ball.

Outside Events
Despite Rodgers' outstanding play on the field, he has several detractors among sportswriters because of his brushes with the law.

In 1970, at the close of his freshman year, he and several friends were charged in a service station hold-up that netted $30. Rodgers described the incident as a "prank" and he got off with probation and had his driver's license suspended.

Subsequently, however, he was held on suspicion of possessing marijuana, though no evidence was found, and last spring he was picked up again for running a stop sign while driving with a suspended license.

The publicity did him harm, but in recent months he staged a campaign to improve his image by visiting hospitals and schools and counseling youngsters.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5 (UPI)—Touchdowns by Anthony Davis of Southern California and Alabama kicks that were by Auburn Saturday are almost certain that Southern California would be second national champion by all groups that name college football's top team at the regular season.

er Davis and his friends named Notre Dame, 45-23, and ran shocked Alabama, 17-16. National Football Foundation made the first group to fall in by proclaiming the Trojans were of the MacArthur Bowl, foundation's award for the team.

ited Press International, AP polls coaches for its declared Southern California national champion by unanimous acclaim this week in its poll. But the Associated Press, which polls writers for its top 20, will wait until the games are played for its ballot. AP also picked USC unanimously on top this week.

observer said, "Ohio beats Southern Cal in the Bowl, maybe the AP will tip the national champion and have a vote for No. 2 in action."
